Meet Isaiah Sterling

Isaiah Sterling is an actor, author, blogger, passionate lifelong learner, leader, speaker, and student voice enthusiast & commentator from Cape Girardeau, Missouri. Throughout his education at Cape Girardeau Public Schools (K-12), he developed and fostered immense leadership skills. While developing and fostering those skills, Sterling worked with student leaders, administrators, educators, and the “quiet kids.” While working with individuals, Sterling gathered essential data - student voice data! Sterling claims that during his years in the public education system, student voice was not something teachers and administrators were fond of. “They were just “number driven,” instead, said an anonymous student. When Isaiah was a freshman in high school, he knew something had to change. Isaiah did just that and implemented change. Now, an infinite number of students across the nation rely on Isaiah to be the vessel for their questions, comments, or concerns when they feel like they can't say something themselves. Sterling is driven to help schools build an amazing culture and dive into the trenches of education. Sterling is a K-12 graduate of Cape Girardeau Public Schools and is an acknowledged figure for his work involving leadership and student voice. Isaiah believes that student voice is crucial to the implementation of all educational practices.
